Reminiscences of the Third Tennessee Cavalry.
BY ADJUTANT WILL A. McTEER.
NO. XIII.

THE McMINNVILLE RAID.

On the 20th of April, 1863, the Cavalry Division moved out on the Woodbury pike, our brigade bivouacking at Readyville for the night. Col. Pickens being absent the regiment was commanded by Lieut. Col. D. G. Thornburgh. About an hour and a half before day on the morning of the 21st the command was again put on the march, passing through Woodbury about sunrise, there leaving the pike and following a rough dirt road. In the afternoon the march was quickened into a trot and after a while to a gallop. Here and there could be seen broken guns and other weapons indicating that work was going on in front. This rapid march was kept up some two or three miles, when we came to McMinnville, passing through the streets in a fast gallop. As we were thus passing through the town, a little boy came running to a box or large stone on the corner of the street, mounting it and unfurling the stars and stripes and joyously waved it to cheer us on. This was something we had not met anywhere in Middle Tennessee, so that it raised the spirits of the tired and worn soldiers, and they were ready to do and dare anything for the brave little boy who had kept his flag bill until this opportunity was given to cast it to the breeze. Soon another greeting was given by loud, strong voices at the side of the road, shouting for the Union and the boys in blue. They turned out to be some of our own brigade who had been captured, and were kept there as prisoners of war, being now recaptured. They cheered us lustily. Passing through the town, the command dashed at full speed down a steep hillside into a creek, clear river, halting for a moment on the river, but going fast as horses could well travel some little distance beyond the river, when a halt was called, upon which an orderly came with orders to report immediately back in McMinnville. Upon getting back we were informed that an engine with one or two cars had just left the depot, and we were ordered to pursue it. As reckless and silly as it may seem, the Second and Third Tennessee and Second Michigan Cavalry started after it. In passing along, the road led us to a large cotton mill. Here, it seemed, there was a hundred or more women, employees of the mill, crowding the doors and windows, excitedly cheering us with their handkerchiefs and waving them. And many of the men raising their hats. These tokens of loyalty reminded us of our own loved, but chain-bound East Tennessee. Soon after we started we found the rebels were loaded with bacon, and they were setting it on fire and throwing it out. On, wildly dashed the cavalrymen, ever few rods passing midlings of fat bacon smoldering and smoking, while the burning bar was spreading over the ground. Following the railroad some ten miles, behold, the engine was in sight of us, but on fire, and the train was badly damaged and could not move. Next, our way was retraced, dark fast coming upon us, but the way was lighted by the burning bacon. Imagine our surprise and eagerness upon coming back to the cotton mill to find them smoldering in ashes—burned to the ground by some reckless soldier and so many loyal women thrown out of employment among their enemies.

Sleeping a few hours near McMinnville, we moved out the next morning passing through Smithville and bivouacking some seven miles from the latter place. On the 23rd we were supplied with some rations and moved to Liberty. Here I took supper and breakfast the first time I had taken a meal in a house with citizens since the 5th of August before—over eight months. On the 25th, we moved to Alexandria. Here a little squad of us went into a mill, getting bran for our horses, part of us got out and stepped out at one door, a guard stepped in at another and arrested all in the mill, taking them to jail and keeping them all night—a narrow escape for some of us.

On the 27th we moved back near Liberty and on the 29th moved again towards Murfreesboro, passing through Auburn and Lascassus, returning to camp on the 30th of April.

On this raid and at McMinnville, the notorious guerrilla and bushwacker Dick McCann, was badly sabred and captured. He was then placed in charge of the Fourth Regular Cavalry, against at night he made his escape and went back to his old haunts and practices.

Workingmen.

Before you begin your heavy spring work after a winter of relaxation, your system needs cleansing and strengthening to prevent an attack of Ague, Bilious or Spring Fever, or some other Spring sickness that will unfit you for a season's work. You will save time, much sickness and great expense if you will use one bottle of Hop Bitters in your family this month. Don't wait. See other column.

Baron De Pardone, from Amsterdam, has been in Gaylesville some time, proposing to secure a loan of $500,000 from his town to construct the Sabine Pass and Northwestern railway, but the Houston papers claim he is a fraud. They say he has ingratiated himself into the favor of many persons with evil intentions, and defrauded some in San Antonio, but the Baron denies.
